Open an ICS calendar file or create a new one and set a desired password. Provided that users have Java installed on their machines, getting around to initializing the app is quite straightforward. Providing a password when creating new calendars is aided by a strength indicator, which will notify users about the password's usability. Once past the initial calendar setup, the resizable interface will provide the space and means necessary for managing entries for each day. Hours for each day are provided, this way enabling users to have a more detailed view of the length of their daily events. Customizing the calendar entries by color-coding is just one of the numerous useful features provided. Besides the encryption capability, at the core of this app is
